Convert Chapin To 'HoboHaven'

Pet Project of Alumni Finally Sanctioned

The name of President H. T. (Housing Tycoon) Heald today moved into the ranks of the great humanitarians with his announcement that starting next term classes in Chapin Hole will be abandoned and that the imposing edifice will be converted into a 'Hobo Haven'.

Heald cited the move as one that was 'bound to happen'. He continued, "Chicago has long been known as the railroad center of the nation and the New York Central and Rock Island are two of the bigger roads entering the city. Therefore it was just natural that IIT with its proximity to the tracks, should become a paradise for the 'Brothers of the Open Toes'."

The Armour Research Foundation has developed a new jet-type ejector, which will gently discharge the hobos from their lower freight car berths onto awaiting feather beds. Capacity of the haven will be 500, which is somewhat less than the 3000 slide-rule pushers now being cozily accommodated. The building is particularly conducive to sleep, as witnessed by anyone cursed with an 8 o'clock class and should prove ideal for the men with the little red sacks.

This project has long been a pet of the Alumni Association. In its ranks are hundreds of 'bos who have expanded into the field of Horizontal Engineering. Plans are now being laid for these prominent alumni to tell the incoming freshman class their success story.

Foxie Paul to Install Slot Machines in Bookstore

To pull itself out of the red, the bookstore this week will install six slot machines Foxie Paul, the manager, revealed at a SUBC meeting today. Profits in the bookstore have dropped to less than ten thousand dollars daily, now that used book sales have declined. Some students have been detected leaving the store with money in their pockets, Paul said. Special devices will be installed on the slot machines to assure against their accidentally paying off when played by a student.

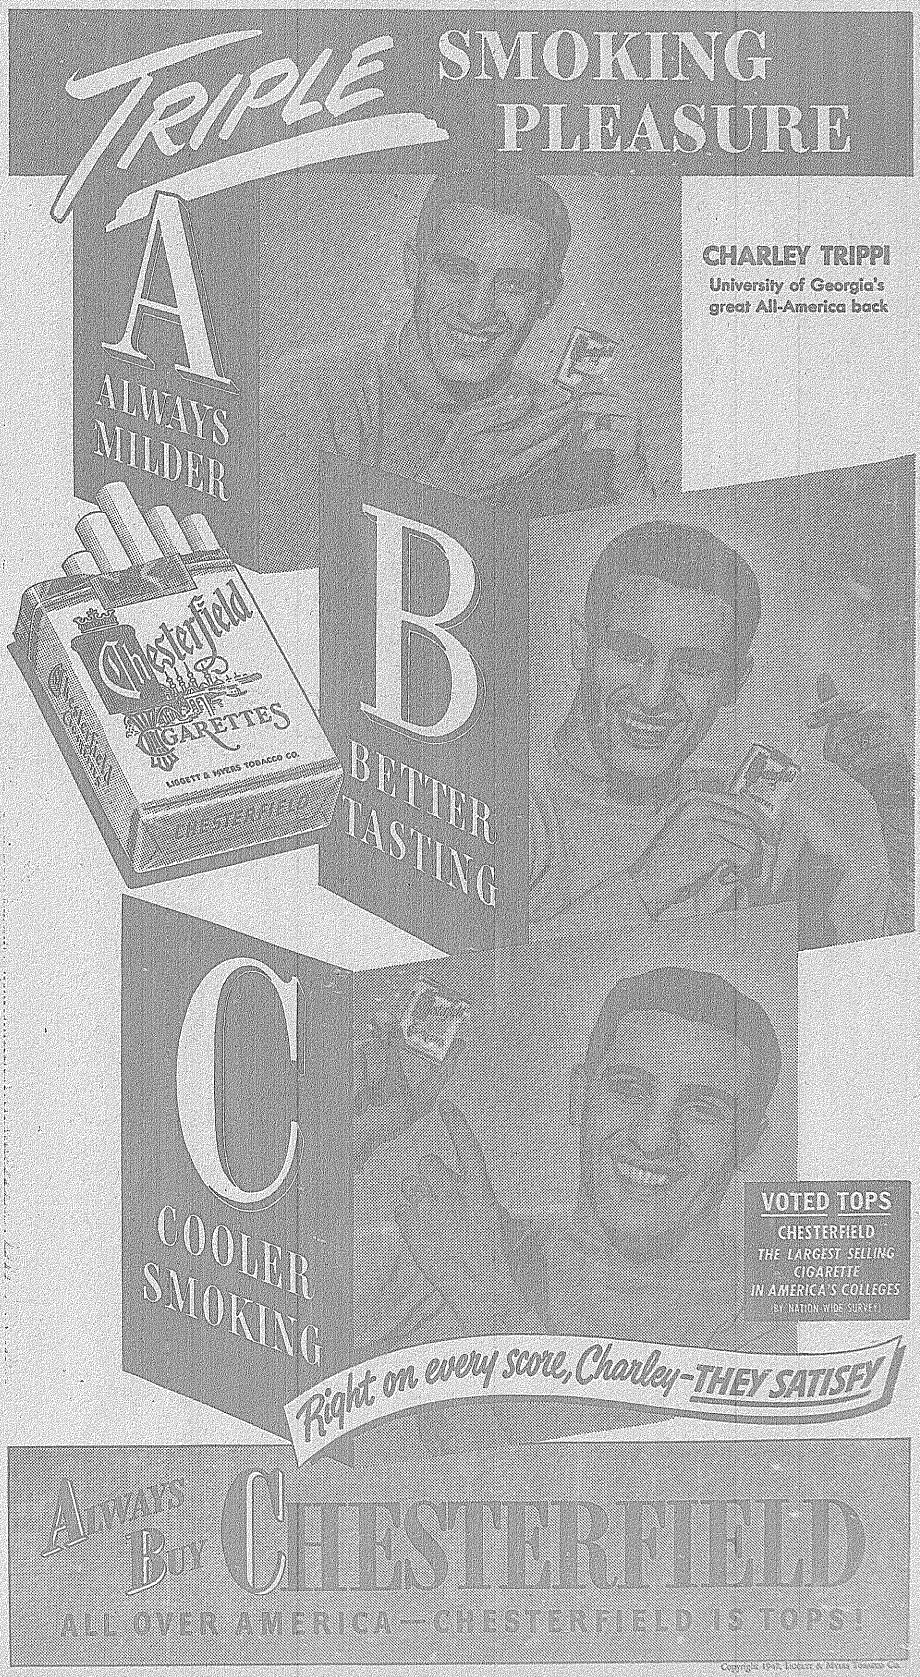
of hate the publicity but we've got to keep the students and faculty informed, don't we, tee-hee?"

By far the schnookiest of the three is the 'Sensational' type. He spies you on the first floor, jumps on your shoulders from the second floor, and drools "Boy are you lucky to see me." Asking him just what makes him think so he proceeds to spout off on the out-of-this- world affair his broken down bunch is having next Friday. They're giving everything but the SU building away and they'll give that away too if anyone will have it.

"It's the greatest thing Tech has seen since Henry Nachman was a sophomore! Oh sure, there was a story about it last week, but the headlines were only two inches high . . . whatsamatter, are ya conservative or somethin? This is great stuff! Tell you what, I'll even let you write the story yourself, seeing you're editor" . . . and so on into the lunch hour.

NROTC to Attack Alumni Hall During Junior Week

A full scale naval attack on the armory in Alumni Hall is to be a feature attraction during Junior Week.

On Monday of last week, the halls of Alumni were flooded to give the naval detachment at IIT sufficient opportunity to make the final plans for the event. Shore bombardments will be carried out by the NROTC students armed with pea shooters, paper clips, and rubber bands.


Lt. Grisslyworld has expressed his fears for the success of such a mission without sufficient air cover. Donations from the Model Airplane Club will be needed to insure a victory for the Blues says Grisslyworld, while Capt. M. G. Regor believes that without a strong submarine attack, the Reds haven't a chance.
