

Time for ugly men to shine nearing

Do you have only two heads? Even so, you may win distinction in IIT's first "Ugliest Man" contest, to be conducted under Alpha Phi Omega sponsorship during the week of May 16-20.

The victor in this battle to identify the top clock-stopper of them all may win fame and fortune. Character's stamp on his face, the chosen one will confront the future—unmolested by glamour-struck women—secure in the knowledge that the world loves him for what he is. Hollywood may beckon—Karloff, Wildmark, and Greenstreet can't last forever.

Immediate rewards will include a beautiful pure metal-plated loving cup, polished to mirror-like gloss. Just think—"Ugliest" can sit around all day, looking at his mug. A complete make-up kit will be included in the awards, as a graceful gesture.

Each would-be contestant must submit a petition with his own and ten other students' signatures, plus two 5 x 7 photographs of himself, to the Technology News office by 6 p.m. Monday. Alpha Phi Omega will provide the entrant with unretouched portraits if he has none available. Photographs will be mounted on coin jars in the North and South unions during the election week.

To help his friend (?) win the title of "Ugliest Man," the voter should deposit coins in the jar under the candidates' picture; one cent equals one vote. Revenue from the campaign will aid in providing capital for the APO student book exchange.

(Continued from page 1) as faculty representative on the ITSA board, and coaching, for a stretch during and immediately following the war, both the basketball and baseball teams. Sonny is sponsor of Honor I.

Not the least of Weissman's distinctions are his ever-present sense of humor and understanding of student problems that have made him one of the most popular and well-liked persons on the campus. It is a testimony to his amiability that he is known and spoken to as Sonny by all, faculty members and students alike.

Festive curtain drops

Another Junior Week - Open House season has passed—Four days during which hundreds of people were honored, victorious, disappointed, made happy, and got blisters on their feet.

Probably the greatest individual honors went to two people short in stature, but having a high amiability index. The Man and Woman of the Year are, respectively, Don Ennis and Irene Radvilas.

The volleyball tournament between the coeds and secretaries was won by the former who then played the Honor I pledger and again were victorious. This was followed by a turtle race in which the reptile entered by the model airplane club was dubbed the speediest and won for its sponsor a loving cup.

Interclass competition was won by the freshmen in volleyball, by the seniors in baseball, and track events were taken by the juniors. A playoff was necessary between the juniors and seniors since both classes finished with the same number of points. Baseball was the chosen game, the final score 11-6 in favor of the juniors.

Delta Zeta, competing against Sigma Kappa, Phi Beta Pi, and Kappa Phi Delta, won a "loving" cup for its efforts in the intersorority track meet.

Its exhibit during Open House won for the Technical Drawing department a plaque as first prize for the most attractive and informational exhibit.

Music was not forgotten during the festivities. The band and orchestra presented concerts to their fellow Techawks and guests, the Interfraternity sing was in evidence and was won by Delta Tau Delta, and the Melody Arcs walked away with the honors in the barbershop quartet contest.

Alpha Sigma Phi won the interfraternity track meet and also presented the best pageant. First places for house decorations were awarded to Theta Xi for individual houses and to Sigma Phi Epsilon in the Brown Hall class.

Three lucky babies were honored during Junior Week-Open House: Scott Nielsen Krause, 17 months, son of Henry W. Krause, BE major; William John Condor, 19 months, son of John Condor, sophomore IE; and Diane Gail Hoover, daughter of Henry C. Hoover; junior CE. Diane competed in the 2½ to 4 year class.
