See games on activity cards

There seems to be some confusion over the question of whether or not student activity cards will be accepted as admission at the "Homecoming" basketball game tonight. The answer; they will be.

I suppose this news should be given front page space, but, due to the late date at which the decision was finally reached, this is the only place I could get it squeezed in.

Here's the scoop. Anyone who bought a ticket for the sole purpose of seeing the game will be refunded his money at the door upon surrendering his ticket and presenting a student ID card. If he bought a "couple" ticket he will have to pay the price of admission to the game for his date, unless she also has a student identification card. Surrendering of the ticket forfeits all right of attending the dance after the game.

All those attending both the dance and the game will receive no refund.

I'll have to apologize for not getting this information to you sooner but there was quite a problem deciding the proper procedure. The reason; our facilities.

Due to the limited seating capacity in our gymnasium, it was felt, and still is felt, that if admission were given free there would not be room for all interested in attending. But since a precedent has more or less been set in past games, by granting admission on activity cards alone, it was deemed advisable to follow the procedure until some definite policy is arrived at. Now it's a matter of first come first served if you want to see the game.

It's a shame that such conditions have to exist, but it's one of the problems encountered in conducting a building program and being forced to hold events in temporary structures.

Slipstick

A group of small children were telling each other where they came from and the prices their parents paid for them. One said, "I was born in a big hospital." Another said, "My mommy and daddy paid a 'nornous price for me!'" Still another boasted, "My mother and father bought me from the doctor and paid a million dollars." The fourth little girl then said, "My ma and pa are poor and couldn't 'ford to buy me. I was homemade!"

Peroxide is an ingredient in a new fuel for jet-propelled planes; but of course, we all know the stuff has been used before to improve the pickup.

Indignant lady to beautiful librarian: "It's strange you haven't that book. My husband said you had everything."

Mother: "When I was your age, young lady, a nice girl would never think of holding a young man's hand."

The Daughter: "But, mother, nowadays a nice girl has to hold a young man's hand."

A wealthy client insured her wardrobe while traveling in Europe. Upon reaching London she found an article missing and immediately cabled her agent in New York. "Gown Lifted in London."

The agent replied, after deliberation, "What do you think our policy covers?"

If a girl's a good loser at strip poker it isn't always sportsmanship. Sometimes it's just plain conceit.

"Ann turned off all the lamps 'cept one funny little green table light."

"Then what happened Don?"

"Well.....I've driven automobiles too long not to know what a green light means."

A cultured woman is one who by the mere shrug of her shoulders can adjust her shoulder straps.

"So your daughter is about to marry. Do you really feel she is ready for the battle of life?"

"She should be. She's been in four engagements already."

He: "In spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love."
She: "Yes, but you think it's spring every time you get into a warm room."

When a girl is a feast of beauty every young fellow wants to eat with his hands.

"Wow! Last night I finally persuaded my girl to say that little word: 'Yes'"
"Congratulations old man. When's the wedding?"
"What wedding?"

The height of absent-mindedness was recently reached by a burglar when he tried to steal some money out of a girl's stocking and then forgot what he went after.

LETTERS didn't make the page this week for lack of space. I would like, however, to comment briefly on one sent me by a freshman who noted the disrespect shown lecturers in freshman general chemistry. He says in the letter, "Obviously, the students have no ability to understand the respect a student of science owes to a master who is teaching them. . . If the students stop to think, they should realize they are losing money by their actions."

He goes on to say, "I believe the crux of the thing is that the students just haven't stopped to think. Certainly, it isn't the result of malicious intent on anyone's part."

All students should think this one over.

BIGGER AND BETTER—that seems to be the theme of student publications this year. The new Student Directory is a useful book, and what's more, it does lay flat! Also to be commended are the Farr Crier and the Fowler Growler. Evidences of the high morale in the student dormitories, they are filled with news and chatter of dormitory activities. These are healthy signs of increased interest in organized student activities.

CURRICULUM CHANGES are the latest topic for conjecture among the students, and dissent among the department heads. Official statements will probably be released when preliminary rumors have grown beards.

I would suggest a committee of students be invited to discuss the proposed revisions.

Chances are that only students with 2.5 grade averages or better would be admitted to the charmed circle, but I'd like to see the less academically-minded represented, too. This whole suggestion, however, may be answered in a doctor's manner—the patient is unfit to prescribe his own medicine.
