

Twins find grade racket a breeze

LEFT WITH THE SHORT END of the stick, Dick Dubbleman (at left) looks glum as he loses "grabs" to attend frosh health lecture.

When I entered "Tech-ed" ten years ago there was a certain pair of promoting twins. They signed up for one curriculum since they were promoters and not jerks. Jack would take all the obvious and intuitive courses while Richard took all the courses in which one may easily get "D's"—if he kills himself. Dick naturally was a student leader, holding elective offices and a top position on publications.

They had a wonderful record; they got out in four years! Of course they were perfectly balanced in their personalities. Jack had a part-time job while being a full time student in order to make the necessary half million that would see the boys through after they got out of the Institution. Dick spent the money in attempting to keep sane, by leading a mild social life, and doing a lot of promoting with small returns.

I remember well the day they got their diploma. They were the only normal ones in the whole sex-crazed, jabbering graduating class.

Then they got jobs, using duplicate copies of the same transcript. By putting forth combined efforts, they surmounted all obstacles. Six years later they were earning the engineers pay of $27 monthly as kybo experts.

Last I heard, they were married. Wonder who the girl is?

Shoot boys open season on bucks

Since the rifle range in Alumni hall has been caged off, the rifle team has been forced to shift the bulk of its activities from shootin' matches to other forms of amusement.

Bull Zye, team captain, shot off his mouth yesterday to the effect that several field trips have been arranged. Nine of the shooters are preparing to revisit Boston, where they will solicit another contribution from Bink's Corporation to help bolster the school athletic fund. Last year Bink's generously donated over a million dollars. Returning, the sharpshooters will drop in at Fort Knocks and investigate the opportunities there.

When they return to campus, the team plans to enliven practice sessions by making extensive use of live targets. This new scheme is based on the theory that shooters will attain far higher scores if they are inspired by such figures as Dean Reekins or Registrar W. Bock Keeley running back and forth across the rifle range.
