The spring of 1905 marked a new era in track athletics at Armour. At that time the students found an excellent field at their disposal and a fine coach in the person of Charles E. Dvorak, then world's champion pole-vaulter. The first event of the season was the class meet, in which the freshmen carried off the honors. The men who made the best showing in that meet were given places on the regular team. This team then took part in the meets with the various colleges on the schedule. The team did
