

A Freshsophjunseniman Class Meeting.

Scene—Science Hall.

President—Good-night! here's five minutes of our time gone and we haven't started yet. Order! Order!

Voices in Rear—Two beers! 'Alf and 'Alf! Make mine the same!

President (shouting)—Now that the meeting has come to order, the secretary will please read the minutes of the preceding meeting.

Secretary—Mr. President, I haven't them with me.

Pres.—A motion is in order to dispense with the reading of the minutes. Do I hear such a motion?

Voice—Aw, ferget the minutes.

Pres.—Allthoseinfavorsayayethemotioniscarried. (breath) Is there any old business?

Small Voice in front—We have to elect a representative to the Conference of Student Piffle Peddlers.

Fat Student—Move the president appoint him.

Pres.—Allthoseinfavorsayayethemotioniscarried.

Student with glasses—I rise to a point of order, Mr. President. You neglected to call for discussion on the question. The importance of such a motion and its bearing on parliamentary procedure cannot be overestimated. I—

Pres.—Sit down. You're overruled. Do you think this is a sewing circle? I appoint Mr. Flabberzump as representative to the conference.

Voice—Hurry up, the hour's up. I've got to get to a class across the street.

Nother Voice—Put a little "pep" into it. Dean Monin's outside.

Third Voice—Move we adjourn.

Exeunt all.

Mieczkowski claims a record. Says the steam engine he designed started to run before he finished the tracing. (Investigation showed this to be a fact. The steam engine got wet and ran all over his tracing so that he had to do it over again.)
