PASKILL: Performers around the keystone play much more consistently when they are assured their plays will be handled well at the initial sack, and our infielders know that no throws are going to "get by" Paskill. Armour is indeed fortunate to have him in her lineup; he is a thoroughbred in the national pastime, and his world of experience has proved to be of great value to the team. As a leadoff man he has no equal; a hard man to pitch to, possessed with the faculty of "looking 'em over," and at the same time with the ability to clout them to the far corners when they come over to his liking. "Pask" has served but half time with the "Tech," so we expect to hear "Two down, gang!" and "Stay with 'em," to echo over the diamond for two more seasons, during which time we hope to win a couple more championships.

CONWAY: During the class series in the fall of 1914, there appeared in the line-up of the Freshmen, a youngster who seemed to know a lot of baseball, and who could hit 'em far and often. Conway won his name, and when it came time for the tryouts in the spring, he more than lived up to the things expected of him. "Conny" proved to be the season's find, and promises to be one of the best ball players that ever played for the "Tech." A fine fielder, good hitter, strong thrower, and possessed of that which is known as "baseball sense." Conway proved one of the leading factors of the "best infield in the Little Five." He alternated between second base and shortstop, but will probably be a fixture at short this season, to take the place of Tommy Sullivan.

KING: In looking over the batting averages, we find that a fellow named King leads the field by a large margin, which would indicate that he must be one of our best outfielders, as outfielders are supposed to hit. Any such assumption, however, is entirely wrong, as King is one of our best little pitchers. At the beginning of the season he was scarcely considered amongst our pitching prospects, but Coach Schommer needed pitchers, and needed them bad, so King started in to make a pitcher of himself. By consistent work he gradually improved, and before the season was over, had developed among other things, one of the best spit-balls that has been seen on Ogden field in years. He proved the most dependable pitcher of the staff, which speaks highly of his determination to make good. We expect a great deal of King this year, and if he continues to improve at the rate he did last year, we know that he will more than fulfill our expectations.
