SENIOR DANCE

They fooled us alright. We thought they had passed peacefully away, but they weren't pushing dandelions out of the ground and they proved it by throwing the first grand backscratching contest of the year on November 19, at the Sherman. It had been so long since we had a class dance that the rush started at about 9 sharp. Oh for the life of a social chairman! We all did envy Bill that night. Like the dickens we did. We only stopped long enough to look about on the floor for a brooch that had been lost by one of our visitors and as this was found in a few minutes after the loss had been announced, we proceeded to keep the musicians working for their sheckels. They say "time flies". It didn't that night. That would have been insulting the speed with which the evening passed. And the worst part of it was we had to stop at 12. But then one can't have a "hooper-do" of a time forever so we piled out and it was some bunch. If you can judge the goodness of a dance by the number attending it, then this dance was the best yet. William K. Jr. and his associates were to be held responsible for this Armour dance and we don't think they are exactly ashamed at the results which their efforts produced. We are not.
