There is, at the Armour Institute of Technology, a branch of the Chicago Y. M. C. A., which branch is known as the Armour Y. M. C. A. Through the Chicago Y. M. C. A. the Armour branch is affiliated with the state Y. M. C. A. and with the international organization. Thus, when a student joins the Armour departmet, he becomes a member of a world-wide movement. By special arrangement with the Chicago organization, the students are allowed reduced rates, wher. they join any of the regular branches. Any student may join the Association, for it is a non-sectarian institution.

The Armour branch occupies two large, nicely furnished rooms on the third floor of Chapin Hall. One of these rooms contains a billiard table, the scene of many a hotly-contested game, for the Institute boasts quite a few fellows who wield a "mean cue." Among the Armour exponents of the art of Jake Schaefer and Willie Hoppe are Bates, Scribano, Gilbertson and the worthy president of the organization, Schulze. The other room might be termed the "clearing-house" of the school, for in this room there are discussed the many momentous questions of the day—in fact, anything from the winning of the late World War to the latest quiz in Calc. and Physics.

The Y. M. C. A. provides an ideal place for the gathering of the students, a place where they may rest from the more serious things of student life.
