The Armour Architectural Society embraces the entire student body of the Architectural department. Through this society the young aspirant is very early infused with the spirit of the work, and the close relationship that exists between the student and the instructor.

Our annual banquet and initiation held November 11 brought back many happy experiences which some of us had encountered, glad to say, years ago. Following a few words of advice given with great sincerity by Nedved, '21, now with Tallmadge & Watson, Architects, Professor Campbell in a brilliant way outlined the systems, accomplishments, and standards of practically every architectural school in the country. The day's festivities closed with an interesting talk by Lionel Robertson on "Period Furniture."

The eastern school received rather a sudden awakening when Nedved won the Warren Prize in New York; also when a 3rd Medal sketch, the highest award for a sketch, by Hoffmeister, and a 2nd Medal by Cauley, were on exhibition in all the eastern schools. This work was done under the auspices of the Beaux-Arts Institute of New York.

The dominating force which has promulgated such enthusiasm into the work of the department whether it be directly or indirectly, collectively or individually, is the untiring efforts of Professor Campbell.
