Frat—Why did the labor boss fire you from that job?

Pin—Well, you know a labor boss is one who stands around and watches his gang work.

Frat—Yes! Yes! What's that got to do with it?

Pin—Well, he got jealous of me. People thought I was the boss.

And the Lecture Closed at Twelve

Prof. Carpenter (to Morgan whom he has caught whispering in course of lecture): "If you have anything important to say perhaps the whole class would like to hear it."

Morgan: "I know they would; it's five minutes to twelve."

———

"Do you know," said the successful merchant, pompously, "that I began life as a barefoot boy?"

"Well," said the clerk, "I wasn't born with shoes on either."—Awgwan.

"Pardon me, sir, but are you a physician?"

"No, but I know where you can get it!" —Widow.

Spats: "Do you get a kick outa going up to your dame's house?"

Slats: "Yea—bo! her old man used to be a football punter!"

A pretty young girlie named Tillie,
Had a beau about whom she was sillie,
 A proposal she wanted
 So that's why she taunted,
"When Willie, when Willie, when Will-he?"

Applicant: "William's my name—looking for work—star punter of last year's team at Harvale."

Manager: "Go to the Complaint Department and handle the kicks."

HEARD ON THE CAMPUS

"What's the latest news, Larry?"

"I'm not reading the news; Ah's looking for a job."

"But dat's the female column."

"Well, ain't ma wife a female?"
