The Faculty Club, although very smooth running and quiet in its operation, is without a doubt, the most important organization at the Armour Institute of Technology. Nestled in the harmonious club rooms of the Mission Building, it serves the purpose of furnishing recreation and escape from classroom formality for the "quiz and lecture wearied" professors. So the Club is really a great light, not only for the professors but for the students as well. Referring to this latter it may be said by way of explanation that the Club maintains a fund which provides help for those students in financial difficulties.

Years ago, and still among the elder members, chess and checkers played an important part in the club liveliness, but times have changed and now it is billiards, ducks, fish, music, cross-word puzzles, and so on. Each member has his hobby and deep intellectual discussions brew within the walls of the club-rooms. Recently a billiard tournament was staged and those having a fair knowledge of the game were set at a handicap in order to make the competition tighter.

Athletic competition and more generally discussion, is quite keen between the members. Golf and tennis are the strongest rivals. Volley-ball, an old time favorite with professors and educators, has lost its fascination, but Professors Tibbals and Perry play hand-ball in an effort to reawaken the interest in volley-ball.

At the end of the summer months the Faculty Club is buzzing with news, which gradually dies off as the winter creeps on and the patiences are tried. But after all it is within those walls that human sympathies are poured forth and they come out to their next classes better men.
