

TRUTH WILL OUT

Attention, anxious readers. To the left you behold the most valuable announcement in this book. That picture is cruel, cold-blooded evidence. The reporter who made this scoop was immediately promoted to chief typist. Here's the dirt on November 27, 1927 straight from the shovel. John, as you see, is announcing that Notre Dame's play was a fair catch. Since then John has nobly shouldered the responsibility of that fatal decision, and has received the brunt of the criticisms. But truth will out. Doc Krathwohl, an ardent Notre Dame rooter and a former all star athlete, jumped up at the crucial moment, threatening to bounce his pipe off John's head, and forced him to make the decision favor the Irishers. Krathy then quickly retired to the locker rooms, confident that his action had escaped notice, but our eagle-eyed cameraman was on the job. We hesitated long before making these facts public, but we have the interest of the game at heart and we want to see justice done on all sides.
