Determined in every way that the class of '32 should be more than just a class, the feeling of responsibility and action characteristic of our first year was carried over and strengthened in our sophomore year. Secure as noble sophomores, our policy of "walk softly and go far" had much to do with the successful year just completed. We young Spartans passed the edge of darkness, of freshmanhood and rose steadily in the past year.

Returning to Armour in the fall of '29 we saw a change in our men. The summer had seen our Fire Protects spread around the mid-west from Minneapolis to Nashville; from Denver to Cincinnati; our Civils laboring at Trout Lake, Wisconsin; our Mechanical, Electrical, and Chemical engineers in the various manufacturing plants thruout the country, learning the technique of their work; and the lucky few "engineers to-be" just vacationing.

Being an unusual class we held no fear of calculus, physics, and mechanics, the subjects so terrifying to sophomores. In fact, we proved with our slipstick that $2 \times 2 = 3.998$. However, we had other things to do, bigger and better. Although we hated to leave our log tables, we wholeheartedly supported all social and athletic events of the year.

Funny what spring makes a fellow do and think, isn't it, Bill?

How about the I. C. station to-night?
