The two-hundred and fifty freshmen, who swept thru the portals of Armour last September, were carefully selected from some seven-hundred applicants. Being a select body, Armour expects much from them in scholarship, athletics, and citizenship.

Bewildered and feeling out of place in their new surroundings, the first business meeting of the class of '33 was chaotic. However, this gave them a chance to show their mettle, and quietly out of the excitement and misunderstanding emerged order. The election of class officers was conducted in a systematic and peaceable manner. R. W. Carlstrom was elected to the presidency, T. D. Lockett became vice-president, W. W. Davies, treasurer, B. C. Scott, secretary, and R. O. Belford, social chairman.

The first social gathering of the class was the Freshman Handshake conducted under the supervision of the upper-classmen. This served not only to bring the freshmen and the upper-classmen together, but it bound the freshmen closer and many new friendships were formed that night.

The new men were defeated by the sophomores in the inter-class baseball tournament with a 7-0 score. When the inter-class basketball season opened, the fresh-
