JUNIOR INFORMAL

ACT I—Scene: Outside the Blackstone Hotel on the evening of January 24th, at 9:30 P. M.

A limping engineer and a friend, with their consorts, meet.

Friend: "What business bringest thou here this balmy evening, friend?"

Engineer: "Thou knowest of the epidemic of that dread plague, 'Dancitis,' raging at dear old Armour these many weary weeks, dost thou not? Our divinely appointed one, Sir Berlyn, hast, after trial and tribulation, secured the services of that famed specialist, Doctor Harold Leonard, who shall, this evening, pit himself against this malady in a noble effort to preserve us unto our great destinies.

ACT II—Four hours later.

Bulletin: Sir Berlyn announces that the operation performed by Doctor Leonard and the assisting surgeons was highly successful. The patients, though utterly exhausted, are resting easily, and appear to be on the road to complete recovery.
