The society is looking forward with keen anticipation to the joint banquet between the Armour branch and the parent society, down town. This event, one of the outstanding of the year, provides for the students an opportunity to become acquainted with young and old men in their profession.

Men who have started as low if not lower than they, and have had to surmount the trials and hardships that face the graduating senior.

Personal contacts such as these give a more lasting impression, a more vivid idea of the usefulness and blessedness of the career that awaits those who but lift their heads to see. These banquets are especially helpful to the senior because he can receive many useful ideas about the world he is to enter because behind him is shelter and ready condolence, while ahead of him is hard practical experience.

With this view in end the society is planning its future work with an idea of the practical in mind, believing that it is better to thrust the student into the world as it is, prepared for any emergency, and equipped to face the facts.

A good share of the success of the organization, the society feels, is due to the ever helpful guidance and assistance of our Honorary Chairman, Professor Roesch, and the students wish to thank him for the time and effort that he has so generously put into the work of the society.
