All this was realized at the smoker held at the Delta Tau Delta house in March. All state and national laws were declared out for the evening and the house was converted into a second Monte Carlo. The walls rocked with cries of "Come Seven," "Little Joe," "Bet the Ace" and a hundred other expressions which are ordinarily familiar only to such men as Baldwin, Gunther and Reglein. When the smoke had all cleared away the worthy ones who had managed to beg, borrow or bury the largest stack of greenbacks were presented with a handsome prize. This may seem incongruous, but 'tis well known that "nothing succeeds like success." The "chow" which Ted Schueler found time to prepare will long remain as a "horrible example" to the future "can opener ball and chain" of the Fire Protect.
