

THE CLASS OF 1933

the members of the class realize the responsibility that will all too soon rest upon their shoulders. They are determined to have the proper preparation, so that they may be more than mere sales engineers.

In athletics, the class of '33 has had great ambitions, for have not other college boys vaulted their way into fame and fortune by their athletic prowess. Already, the sophomore class has shown its ability along this line by placing several of its members on the varsity teams. As a result, these teams are possessed of a more determined spirit because of the presence of sophomore candidates whom they know will be capable of carrying their responsibilities in the future years. While the class of '33 did not win any interclass titles, it has had the satisfaction of knowing that its opponents were pressed to their limit before finally conquering it.

O. W. Staib

Being a versatile group, the men of '33 realized that to get the most out of school life, they would have to become associated with the many organizations of the Institute. It was apparent to each that mere technical training was insufficient for real material success. Hence, many of this class have secured positions on the various publications. The fact that the class was well represented in the Bronwell, Rooney, Kampwirth.

Loesche, Mauer, Beemsterboer, Poedtke, Beard, Bottorff, Andersen, Zirivas, Clayson, Quinnell, Nelson, Belton, Mulroney, Donnellan, Meade, Gabriel, Higgins.
Gibian, Pearson, Ollison, Gault, Booth, Hall, Lantz, Pihl, Anderson, Davies, Leavitt, Tyler, Reynoeas, Ellis, Pechman, Nelson, Smethells.