

■
many small parts make up one big whole. our characters are built by early training, environment, associations, and observations. no two sets of factors are quite alike—no two characters are the same.