

SENIOR INFORMAL

The class of '34 centered its activity in the Gold Room of the Congress Hotel on the evening of Friday, December 8, 1933. It was here that the Senior Class played host to the socially inclined of Armour Institute during the progress of the first informal dance of the past winter season. Throughout the course of the evening the guests manifested their various approvals of the efforts of the upper-classmen by thoroughly enjoying the time spent with them.

Tables were placed around the dance floor as a means of further increasing the degree of sociability of those present. An auxiliary, in this respect, to the tables was found in the large number of lounges available in the room adjoining the dance floor. A further boon to the success of the dance consisted in the serving of punch to quench the thirst of all who cared for it.

Every effort was put forth by the social committee to make a creditable showing for the Senior Class. In parallel with this statement it may be said that every indication given by the guests was an expression of whole-hearted approval of the entire affair. A fair unit of judges for the success of the dance was made up of the chaperons; Dean and Mrs. Heald, Professors Enszt, Swineford, Winston, and their wives.
