

JUNIOR WEEK

Deviating for Junior Week, as per custom, from our classroom activities, the Junior Class presented a unique program under the direction of the Junior Marshals Peterson, Quandee, Sumner, Concolino, Paulsen, Knaus, and Linden.

With an enthusiastic group of participants officially dismissed from classes, and with the student body rooting from the side-lines, Rho Delta Rho and Phi Kappa Sigma started the ball rolling on Monday morning with the finals of the Interfraternity Baseball Tournament. Hindered by cold weather, which affected only a few of the spectators, the Rho Delta Rho team was victorious after nine innings of hard-fought ball.

With some of the students at the ball game, the remainder were busy preparing the departmental Open House exhibits. All of the laboratories and classrooms were "dressed" for inspection by the twenty-five hundred visitors interested in our work at the Institute and in the display of science and architecture. When the visitors had completed their inspection of the exhibits, they found enjoyment in dancing to the strains of Nick Wonderlick's band in our gym.

The pentathlon, with its two divisions, proved to be popular from the large number of contestants who entered. Tad Omiecinski and Don Neal were the winners in their respective divisions.

On Wednesday interest in activities ran high as the finals in the interclass softball tournament found the Junior Class to be the winners.
