Considering the vicissitudes which it faced, the Armour Tech basketball team of 1935-36 did remarkably well. Basketball, it seems, had the misfortune of being the only sport to which the freshman ruling applied. With the loss of four of the best men by graduation, and no incoming freshmen to replace them, prospects for a good season looked very dark indeed. Realizing this, the players in the other three classes answered the call to practice with full force. By the opening of the season Coach Krafft had them shaped into a first class basketball team.

The team won eight of its fifteen games during the season, which ran from December 5 to February 22. This year held more than its share of fast, scrappy games, in which the score see-sawed back and forth, one of the teams finally winning by only a few points. Coach Krafft and Co-captains Warner and Dollenmaier are to be complimented upon instilling such
