

Joerns Mixes it Up

Stoeber Gets The Decision

Moore Shows How It's Done

Seeking new fields to conquer, Coach Weissman entered a seven-man team in the Golden Gloves tourney sponsored by the Chicago Tribune. Since this is the first time that Armour had entered this boxing classic, the team was placed in the novice division. Scoring a total of five knockouts and two decisions in the eleven bouts fought, four men of Armour's entry stayed to the quarter-finals. Paul Moore, who went the farthest of any of the men entered, won his first quarter-final fight by a first-round knockout, but lost his second by a close decision. The fighting opened rather inauspiciously for the Techawk squad when Krok lost his in the 147-pound class, but then the fireworks started. Seidenberg won his first bout with a first-round knockout and repeated his performance in his next fight to reach the quarter-finals in the 147-pound class. Joerns, fighting at 125 pounds, won his first match by a three-round decision and came back later to put his next opponent to sleep in the first round, thus becoming the second Armour man to reach the quarter-final round. Fighting at 147 pounds, Moore won his first bout handily on a three-round decision, and then had the good fortune to advance to the next round with a bye. The next day brought ill fortune to the Techawk leather pushers. Seidenberg lost his fight on a close decision, and was joined in defeat soon after by Joerns, who received a bad cut on the head and had to retire. An injured thumb forced Stober to retire, and with him went the Tech Golden Gloves aspirations.

Joerns

Way

Allegretti

Lindahl

Hock