JUNIOR CLASS

was that the present high standing of the Junior class in the Armour social structure was due to the facts that the Juniors were gentlemen.

Believing themselves to be engineers in addition to being selfstyled gentlemen, they set about confirming their beliefs and establishing the proof with which it would be necessary to prove to others that the Juniors were gentlemen. As a first step, a review of the activities of the class during their first two years will prove that they had the necessary qualifications required in the making of a gentleman. As a second and conclusive proof a review of the Junior year activities of the class will show that they have lived up to their newly assumed title.

A review of the accomplishments of the class of '39 in their first two years at Armour reveals much to be proud of: accomplishments worthy of gentlemen in the making are easily produced for verification. In the Freshman year the class overturned tradition by announcing and holding their Green Cap Ball early in the social season. The class soon followed the profitable Green Cap Ball with a second dance that featured originality of arrangements early in the Spring. The second dance was an unusually successful affair, the Pent House Party, held at the exclusive 666 Club. There in the fall of 1935 this beautiful ballroom and spacious lounge overlooking Lake Michigan formed a perfect setting for the Freshmen's supreme attempt. In addition to the hard working social committee of the class many first year men were valuable assets to the various athletic teams. In the interclass competition a fine showing was made, and the class of '39 definitely established itself as a power to be reckoned with in athletic circles.

During the class of '39's Sophomore year several social gatherings were held. Outstanding among these events were the Sophomore Smoker and the Sophomore Informal. The smoker was held at the Lawson Y. M. C. A. on the eve of the Thanksgiving vacation. Featuring a dissertation by John J. Schommer which climaxed the events of the evening, the class enjoyed swimming, playing ping pong and card playing. Refreshments were also served during the evening's entertainment. Social activities of the year were ended with the holding of the Sophomore Informal.

The class shattered Armour tradition during the summer vacation that followed by holding two social events during the summer vacation. These activities attracted the attention of all classes at Armour, since summer social activities were heretofore unprecedented at Armour. Although the social committee performed something untried, the summer activities were highly successful. The first of these events that was held during the vacation was a class smoker at the Lawson Y. M. C. A. This gathering was attended by a large number of the class in addition to the substantial representation received from the faculty. Enjoyed by all that attended, it was little wonder that those who were present looked forward to the yachting party that was scheduled for the latter part of the vacation. This party which had been mentioned before the class adjourned for the summer recess received the immediate support of class members. Held in August the party was well attended, and the trip out onto Lake Michigan proved to be a complete thrill.

The resumption of classwork at Armour found the class once again in control of its activities. Refreshed with the memories of the summer's vacation and filled with a determination to keep the class as unified as it had been in the Sophomore year, the members awaited the class elections.

The class assembled for the first social event of the year when it met at the Lawson Y. M. C. A. for the annual class smoker. This affair which had received considerable publicity from the hard working social committee and which was advertized as a smoker of smokers found the entire class in attendance. The turnout being a complete success added enthusiasm to those present with the result that everyone had an enjoyable and interesting time at the class's first gathering. Interesting impromptu

Junior Juicers Hard at Work

