

Top Row: Capodanno, Pater, Young, Levine, Johnson, Van Alsburg, MacConnell, Landow, Thomas. Second Row: Footlik, Loutzenheiser, Coyle, Lyckberg, Rothenberg, Harrison, Spencer, Morris. Third Row: Constan, Buckman, Bunce, Haedike, Fried, Schlifke, Grombacher, Jacobson.

compared with Junior formal. This traditional and outstanding social event of the year at Armour was made a never-to-be-forgotten affair by the able members of this year's social committee. This group of interested Juniors had worked continuously since shortly after the Thanksgiving holidays in an effort to make the dance an outstanding success. The hotels of the entire city were scanned in an attempt to find a ballroom that would appropriately fit the occasion. Finally the committee chose the Grand Ballroom of the famous Palmer House in Chicago's Loop for the scene of the dance. Realizing that comfortable and pleasing surroundings are only part of the requirements of a highly successful dance, the social committee made every effort to secure a radio dance orchestra of outstanding fame. Successful in this the committee finally announced Saturday of March the 5th as the date of the dance. Tickets were immediately placed on sale, while additional provisions were made to pay for the bids on weekly installments in an effort to aid those students that might not be in a position to purchase their bids outright. Many took advantage of the installment plan, and it was this provision that helped to make the dance such a well attended affair. Juniors predominated although many members of other classes at Armour were in attendance along with their friends. Final plans for the dance were completed several weeks before the dance was held, so that all was in readiness on the evening of the dance. The gala affair began shortly after eight-thirty in the evening when a tasty seven course dinner of chicken was served. Between the courses Armourites and their friends danced on the superb floor of the Grand Ballroom to the pleasingly melodious music that was furnished by Gay Claridge and his radio dance orchestra. Dining, dancing and just watching the activities from the decorative balcony completed an evening that will be long remembered as an evening when perfection was the keynote.

After the formal the class again returned to the reality of hard school work. As Spring weather became more apparent, however, there was also a second noticeable activity. Ogden Field once more became the scene of activity of students. Members of the various classes were found out there, practicing and preparing for the baseball and track events that were to be held in Junior Week. Although eliminations were carried out before Junior Week, all semi-final and final contests were held during Junior Week. This week as all Juniors know was directed by the Junior Class through eight of its members who acted as marshalls. These marshalls were elected shortly after the return from the Easter Recess. This election was closely contested, but all agreed after the excitement had subsided that eight very good men had been elected to serve as

Come On, Bob, Swing

