

JUNIOR INFORMAL

A Group of Dancers
Relax at the
Junior Informal

Tradition—what is the meaning of that word? What importance did it play in the social calendar of last year? Should we keep tradition?

Not that this is a vital question; but the Juniors of 1937, otherwise known as the class of '38, broke all forms of tradition by having their formal in the winter. Besides having the Junior Formal in the winter, they also broke tradition and made a success of their second venture, a spring informal dance during Junior Week.

The class intended to close the activities of a most successful Junior Week with a dance to be attended by all of Armour and their friends. But attend is a weak word to describe the hilarious evening the Armour men spent under the roof of the beautiful Medinah Country Club. The entire club, the spacious lounges, the magnificent ballroom, the many balconies, and the veranda where many fleeting moments were spent, were all at the disposal of the Techawks and their friends.

The merry couples, who were not roaming around the luxurious club, were to be found dancing the enchanting rhythm of the orchestra. The many tantalizing tunes which sent the light feet across the floor will be remembered for years to come. May we add that all of Armour is happy that one broken tradition ended in a highly successful and enjoyable evening.

Schlifke

Anderson

Mitchell

Jacobson

