After getting away to a great start by winning three of the first games, the Techawks faltered and could win but two of the remaining ten of the season. The fact that six players were forced to miss games because of injuries certainly did not make Stenger's task easier. Heading this list of casualties was Co-captain Paul Henriksen, who was lost to the team for the entire season because of an injury received in an early practice session. However, Ed Swanson took very good care of the captain's ledger sheet by leading all scorers with a total of 119 points. Two sophomores, O'Connor and Sliwa, had marks of 81 and 70 points, respectively, to follow Ed on the scoring list; these two in turn were followed by Norkus with 61 points, and Scherer, a guard, with 54 points. Scherer was elected to lead next year's team as Captain. The juniors and sophomores of this year's squad should form an experienced and well-balanced nucleus, since six of them participated in at least ten games of this year's schedule. A thrilling photo-finish win over Chicago Teacher's College opened the season. As in most of this year's games, Armour found itself behind at halftime, this time to the tune of 9-18.
