

The pentathlon, an annual feature testing the athletic versatility and supremacy of Tech's "he men," was won by Svadgis, a tank man.

Thursday featured the thirty-third annual spring concert of the Armour Tech Musical Clubs, with the popular interfraternity sing. In tone with the evening, the glee club and orchestra rendered a varied program from spirited ballads to tender love songs. The fraternities, bordering the balcony, then vied for choral supremacy, each with a presentation of two numbers. Competition ran high, and several houses were disappointed, but one was very happy—the Phi Kapp's who won with their melodic renditions of "Loyalty Song" and the "Marching Song."

Friday dawned and the restless freshmen and confident sophomores congregated in preparation for the historic rush. Meanwhile the Delts and Phi Kapp's settled the interfraternity baseball championship in a prolonged but friendly argument. The Delts lost 9-2, partly because their minds weren't on the game.

Beginning of the Frosh-Soph sack-rush

