

ARMOUR ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Tradition established the rule that graduates from a school do not leave their alma mater behind them. For this reason alumni associations have been formed all over the country. Armour has long lived up to the tradition.

Membership in Armour's Alumni Association is open to graduates, those who take advanced degrees, and any student who takes one year in the regular four year course. Active membership is maintained by payment of annual dues, non-paying members holding associate memberships.

One of the most important functions of the association is publishing the "Engineer and Alumnus," boasting a circulation of over 20,000. Few students realize the tremendous value of this magazine in acquainting the country with Armour. It is sent to all paying alumni and many industrial leaders as well. This spreads Armour's reputation all over the land.

Another valuable function is the keeping of a student loan fund from the sale of life memberships in the association. Senior students may borrow from the fund in case of need.

Placement records of each graduate are kept by the association to aid in getting jobs. This placement service lasts for life and is given free of charge. Records are also kept of the addresses and activities of the graduates for publication in the "Engineer." In this way the alumni are always held together by a natural, friendly bond.
