

President
WILLIAM E. MACKEY

A nod of a grayed head. A mumble, "I never thought he'd make it." A sigh of relief. All this emanated from various members of the faculty as President Heald presented to us our degree and lustily shook our hand.

We, however, had survived four tumultuous years of study and play. The faculty had not only also survived the ordeal, but will continue its struggle with youth for many years to come. We recognize the insurmountable debt that we owe to these men of learning.

Armour and the class of '40 must part. Symbolically we enter new eras of exploit together. We, the last class to graduate from Armour Institute, salute the new and mightier Illinois Institute of Technology.

Lloyd Norkus

Dan Shaver

Charles Eulo

Eugene Worcester