The Armour Architectural Society, formed in 1924, was established primarily to bind the students in the School of Architecture into a unit which could act in the interests of these students. Both social and professional in sweep, the society has provided meetings of keen interest to the profession and social events of unique success to the Institute as a whole.

Reorganized last year, the society now embraces all classes. Two representatives from each class, under the supervision of a faculty adviser, meet as a governing body to arrange for the meetings and events of the year. This new plan has brought a reinterest in the society functions and an increased attendance at both social and professional activities.
