

Matching strokes with such schools as the University of Kentucky, Loyola, DePauw, Beloit, and North Central, the 1939-1940 Tech mermen turned in a brilliant seven win, three loss season. Many a splash has been raised in Bartlett pool on the U. of C. campus since such a positive record has been made.

At home in the final meet of the season the McGillivraymen reached their peak as they trounced DePauw by a 39 to 27 score, for the first Armour win of the Tech-Hoosier feud. Other impressive wins included double victories over Beloit and North Central; and single gains over Chicago Teachers College and George Williams. The team lost only to Loyola, DePauw, and the University of Kentucky.

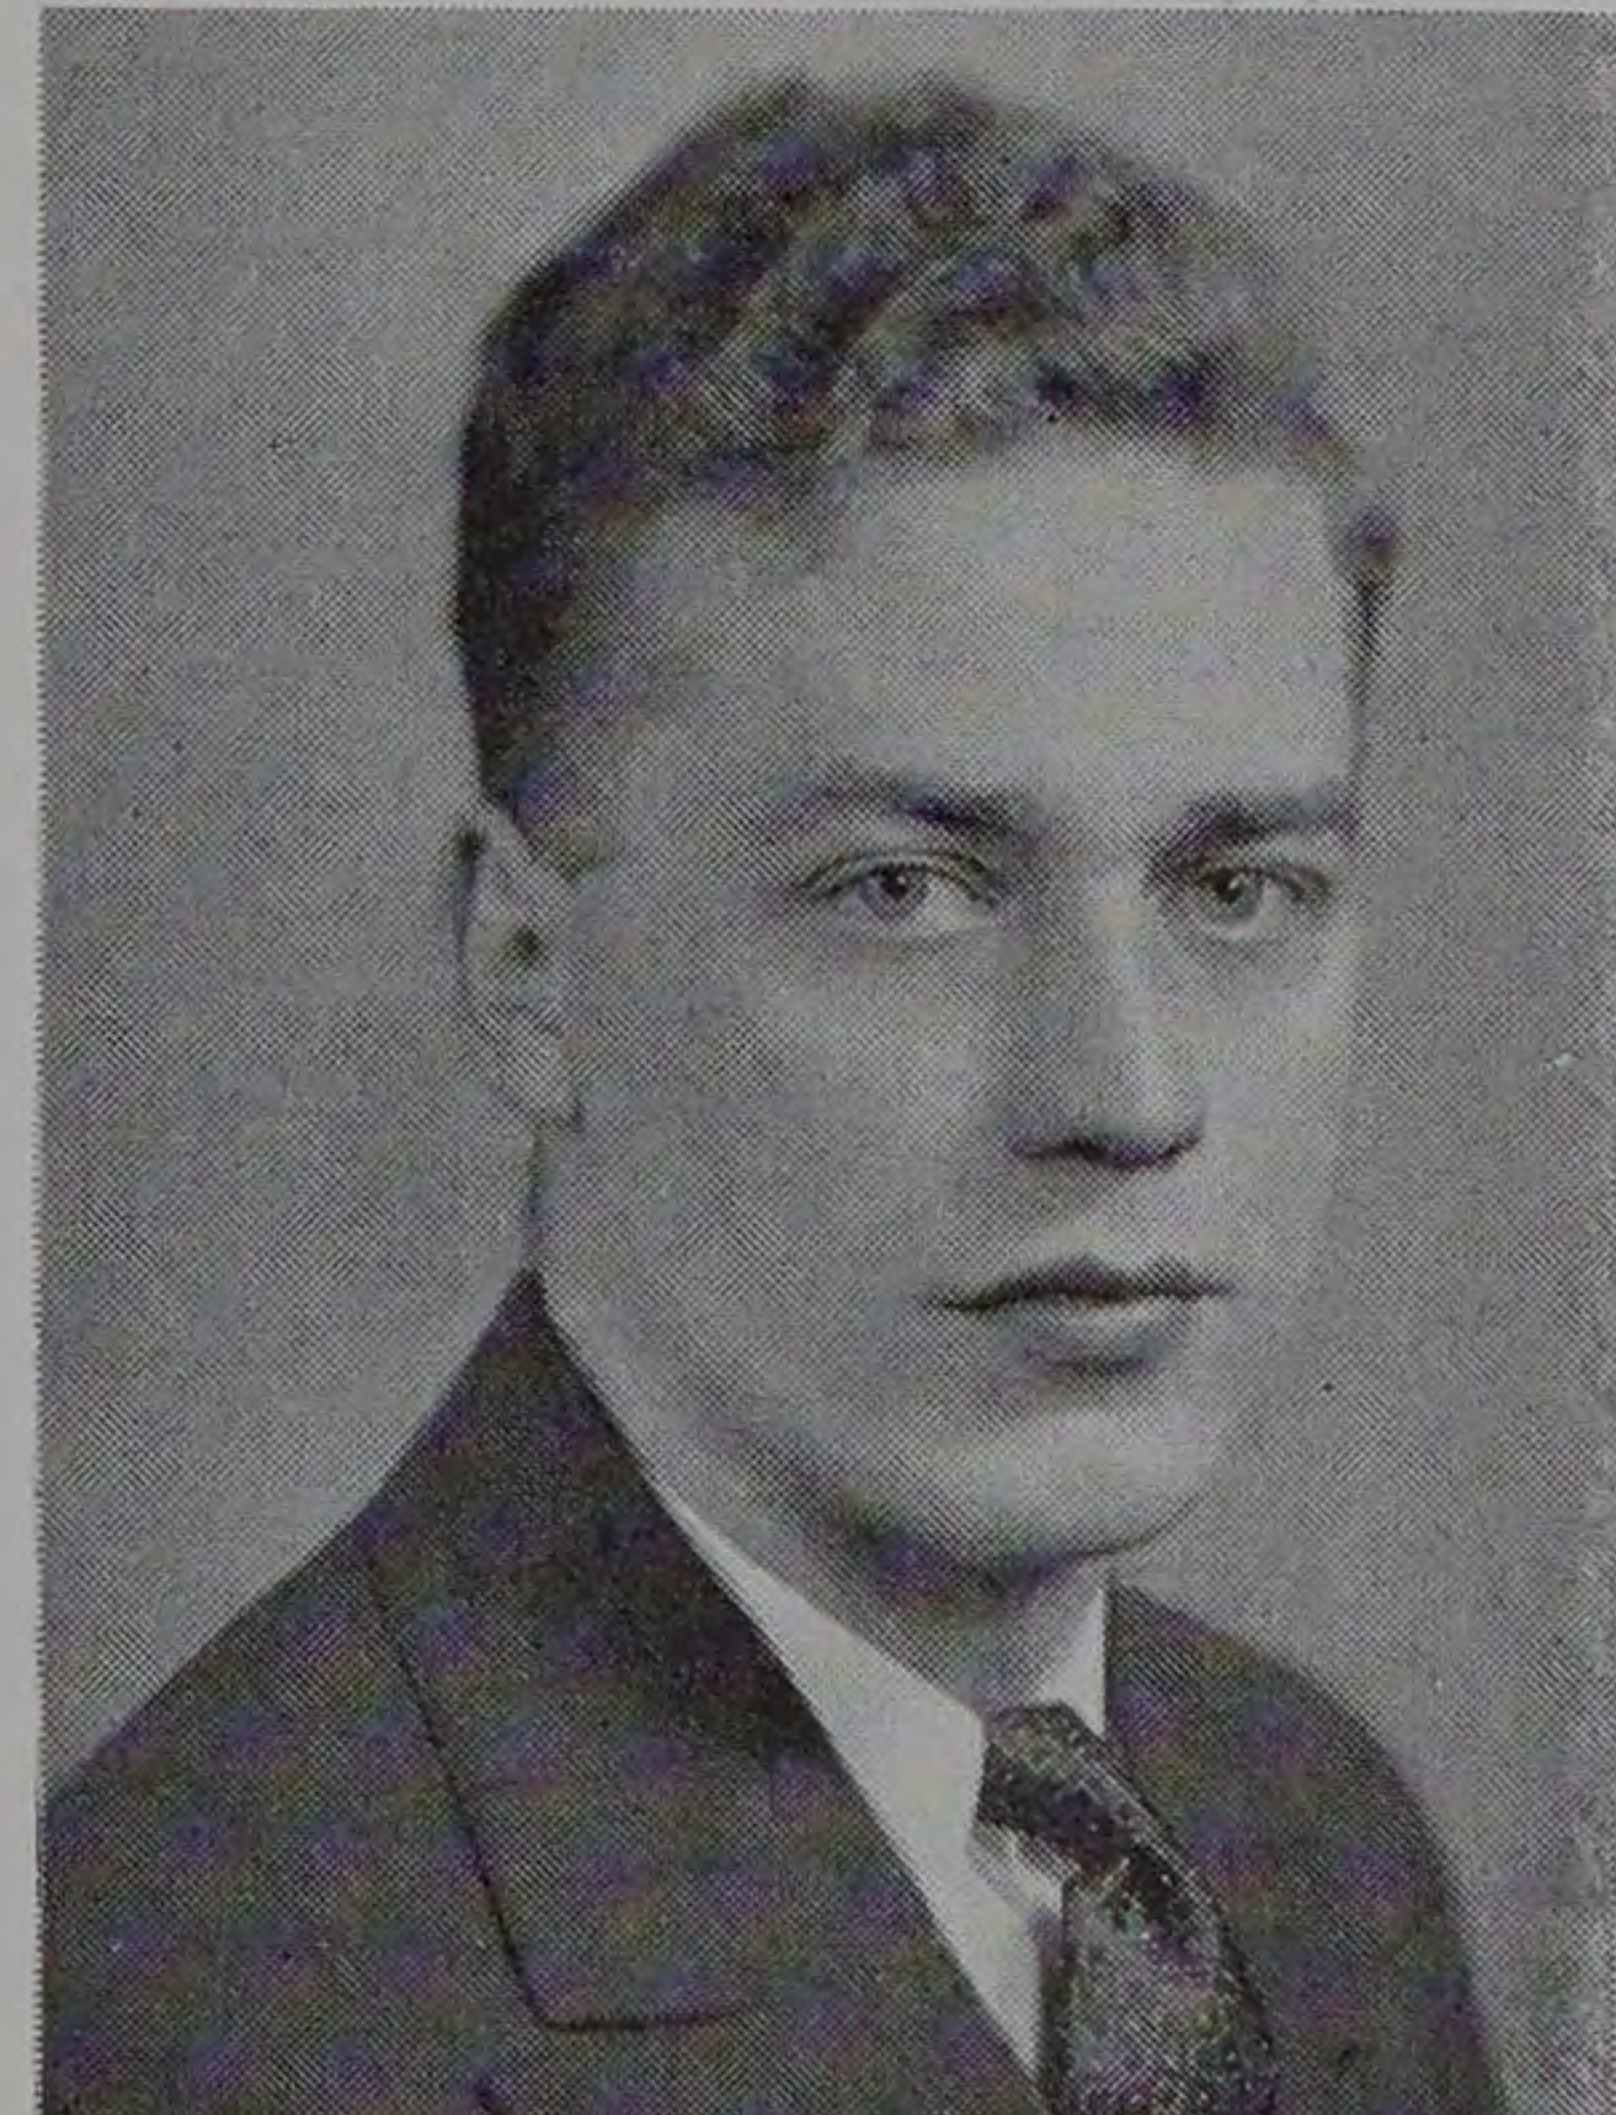

Much of the team's success was due to Pearson, frosh free styler, and the breaststroke department headed by Koos, Svagdis, and Co-Captain Hutchings. Koos went undefeated in the 100 yard breast stroke. Backstrokers Huxhold and Captain-elect Blume made the squad a well balanced contingent.

Dodge, the "old Faithful" of Armour's past and present, splashed into rough water more than once in his specialty, the 220 yard free style, against Beloit and DePauw. The medley team of Huxhold, Svagdis, and Co-Captain Anderson was consistent in its triumphs. As many of the meets were won by virtue of a Sprint relay win, the "Four Seahorsemen," Rademacher, Mankus, Pearson, and Anderson, played an extremely important part in this season's great success.
