

INTERFRATERNITY

No sooner had the freshmen checked in their chemistry lockers than the fall program of intramural, interclass, and inter-fraternity athletics was put into full swing.

Vying with the City Series for recognition in the baseball world was Armour's "Little Series," the annual interclass hardball classic. The juniors were out to repeat their last year victory. And so they did, for, after eliminating the ailing seniors, they whipped the frosh in a 3-1 six inning thriller. The men of '42 surrendered to the runner-up frosh in the first bracket.

When part of the late summer heat had abated from the spaciousness of Ogden field, the engineers laid aside their slide rules and picked up the pig skin instead of B. O. Pierce. Touchball weather had arrived, and soon the dust-laden air above Ogden was filled with spiralling footballs and the voices of a thousand engineers. After two months of gruelling play, the junior mechs, paced by Knorr-ing and Erickson, were declared the winners of the interdepartment touchball tourney with a record of seven wins and one defeat.

Where the department boys had left off in the "touchball" field, the fraternity men began their tourney. In the Greekmen's title game, severe blocking and general hard playing marked the Phi Kaps 7-6 defeat of the Delts.

From Ogden Field to the 5th floor "cheese box" tramped Armour's unsung but courageous athletes as the interclass basketball tournament was started. While chill winds were piling the snow deep around Machinery Hall, the frosh were piling up the points against their unlucky opponents as they gave the seniors a 24-19 beating for the coveted interclass
