

When gentle breezes blow in the smell of late Spring, and budding young engineers can no longer concentrate on those math problems, or get those drawing plates finished, it's a sure sign that Junior Week is just around the corner. Junior Week, 1939 version, was no exception.

This thirty-fifth annual classic got off to its usual gay start with Vic Svagdis copping the Pentathlon Tuesday afternoon. Wednesday afternoon and evening made school history as a record-breaking Open House was held for Armour's countless friends. Thousands marveled at the ingenious and elaborate departmental displays. Once again the famed Kiss-O-Meter drew hundreds of the curious.
